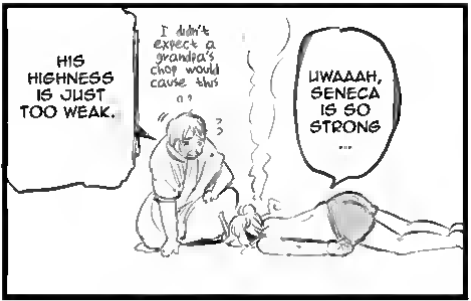
IF YOU REALLY WANT TO GO, YOU'LL HAVE TO GET PAST ME FIRST!
HAHAHA, ARE YOU SURE SENECA? MY WISH TO INVESTIGATE BENDS TO NO ONE!



Nero is not athletic at all so he's pretty weak but among the emperors, there were ones who were unbelievably strong.

Roman Emperors
you don't get to see often

Diocletian

An Emperor Descended from Freed Slaves
The Miraculous Story

As a descendant of freed slaves and with a career as a military man behind him, he was often ridiculed by nobles. He became an Emperor thanks to his great efforts in battles.

Most emperors were given for famous! upon a lifelong title. Diocletian was one of the very few emperors who just retired. I'm getting old. It's time to resign from my position! and enjoyed his old days while living a secluded lifeb. He was exceptional from start to finish.

Valerian

A reverse story where the Emperor becomes a slave, very rare in the history of Rome

Valerian became an Emperor as a son of a noble family. But he was captured during the fight with the Persians and made into a slave.

What exactly happened to him is a matter of all sorts of speculations, like that he was made into a prostitute, for the Persian king when he instantly ate horse. Or that he was sent in cruel games, killed as a part of an intrigue and many other tragic slave-emperor ghost stories.

But lately there are some who suggest that Valerian was actually very well treated and that he and the Persian king went along splendidly

Didius Julianus

Oh, nowadays you can buy the emperor's throne rights! Well, I have the money. Let's just buy it (・∀・)

And so he became an emperor by making a successful bid for the throne.

He was the elite amongst elite, very popular, enormously financial as amongst the people but nowadays we would judge him as the man who bought his throne in desayor in Yahoo auction. And so he was swiftly buried in the darkness of history.

"I didn't do anything wrong! I didn't hurt anybody...!...;)"

He so his death message would go.
